STRANGLERS PUT END TO LIVES OF 2 YOUNG WOMEN

Girl Slaver Killed by Tightening Cravat Around Her Neck Identified by Evening World as Sophie Kerehr, of Buffalo.

With blue marks about her neck indicating she had been strangled, her face and body covered with blood, leading to the theory that after she was strangled she had been attacked with a sharp knife in the hands of a ripper, the body of a young woman of twenty-five was found to-day in the areaway of the tenement-house-at-No. 204 East-Ninetieth street, a quiet and respectable neighborhood.

The door is kept locked. After unlocking the door with the janifor's keys O'Hara started inside with his paint cans in his hands. Lying upon the floor he saw a round sausage shaped object of the bigness of a broom handle and ten inches long. At one end of R was a cap and attached to the cap were a few blackened shreds of fuse. O'Hara knew at a glance what the stuff was. It was dynamite, and there was enough of it to make a recent site of the building if R should happen to go off.

So O'Hara went right away from there. He kept on going until he found a policeman, who took the infernal machine to the East One Hundred and Fourth street station. From there it was carried to the Bureau of Combustibles and tested.

The dynamite weighed over a pound and a half. An examination of the club-house areaway showed how the whole thing had been planned. Standing in the shelter of the stoop, the operator had raised a small window in the lavatory and, after slipping the dynamite through, had lowered it to the floor by means of a long fuse of greased tow, and then he had closed the window on the twine and touched off the loose end, probably with a lighted cigar or cigarette.

The door is kept locked. After unlocking the existing monopolies such trade and commerce, and to dissent the satisting monopolies there.

James Astrello, of No. 303 East One Hundred and Eighth street, the assistant to Janitor Foy, told the police that he first saw the dynamitie in the lavatory about two weeks ago. Not knowing its uses or what it was, he says he left it there. He had seen it several times since, but did not touch it.

Sheriff Hayes, the Democratic leader of the Twenty-eighth Assembly District, had just heard of the finding of the dynamite when a reporter for The Evening World saw him.

"I have no idea who eculd have planned to blow up our club," he said. "So far as I know I have no ensmissex except political enemies."

There are a good many Italians in the district and it has been the scene of several bomb explosions, but Leader Haves was positive that no Black Hand nint could have figured in this case. He said he had received no threatening letters.
